Dear Old Golden Rule Days:
Oregon Schools Remembered

Tualatin’s own Oregon Teacher of the Year and the State School Superintendent who gave her that award will jointly review how education has changed in Tualatin and statewide on Wednesday, September 5, 1:00pm. THS board member Evie Andrews still substitutes occasionally at Tualatin Elementary School. Dr. Verne Duncan (photo above) attended a one-room school in Buell and later was a teacher, principal, district superintendent, ESD superintendent and college professor before election as State Superintendent. He retired as a state senator in the Oregon Legislature where control of K-12 education rests today. He now spends much of his spare time researching his family’s pioneer roots in Oregon. He is a close friend and shirt-tail relative of THS member Edie Torgeson. This special “back to school” program will include a “taste” of what Evie does with 4th graders who participate in the annual Pioneer Days sponsored by THS each May. Monthly program sponsored by the Tualatin Historical Society. For information, call 503.885.1926.

Know Your Tualatin Historic Homes and Buildings

Join THS member John Bowles on a narrated visual tour of Tualatin’s historic structures on Wednesday, October 3 in anticipation of the city’s centennial celebration in 2013. Tualatin Historical Society experts Loyce Martinazzi and Yvonne Addington will provide additional information as we study selected photos from the Society’s archives and city maps showing where these homes and buildings are (or were) located and in many cases how they looked in years past. This is the regular monthly meeting of the Society and is open to the public. John is a previous president of THS and was instrumental in preserving historic houses in Tualatin. He built several scale models of these and the old Methodist church that have been very effective in fund raising. These will be on display at the October meeting which starts at 1:00 pm. See photos of some the historic buildings on page 3 of this newsletter.
President’s Column
From Co-Presidents Larry McClure & Norman Parker

If you ever wonder if THS is making a difference in the lives of Tualatin residents, then hang around the Heritage Center for a few hours and talk with visitors who come to see us.

While weeding the 4th graders’ garden area in late August it was rewarding to help one family who dropped by to actually harvest corn, potatoes, squash, tomatoes and flowers the students had planted during our THS Pioneer Days in the spring. Even the father, a chaparrone on the earlier May field trip, had never seen how potatoes grow from a little eye in a cutting.

As we approach the Centennial of Tualatin in 2013, we want to offer more such learning opportunities for our community to learn how this place we call home came to be. Thanks to our THS curators, for example, you can see right now an 1862 sewing machine and vintage dresses on display on the Heritage Center stage. These authentic artifacts were donated by long-time Tualatin families. The city’s Arts Advisory Committee is seeking photographs of iconic landmarks such as the Hervin Company (Blue Mountain Dog Food) and Sweetbrier Inn for rendering in a special watercolor art series. Events like the Crawfish Festival next year offer more opportunities to help residents gain a perspective on life and time. One idea being considered is inviting anyone who’s 100 years old to ride in the parade. Your suggestions on how to celebrate Tualatin’s 100th anniversary are needed. The THS program committee has devised one great way to be informed about Tualatin landmarks for our October monthly meeting (see story on page 1). Be ready to amaze your neighbors and visitors about a number of historic homes in our city, not just our wonderful Sweek House.

Ice Age National Trail Idea Still Being Pushed

Past THS president Yvonne Addington was invited to participate in a four-state interagency planning project in July. Held in Kennewick, Washington the large gathering resulted from a National Park Service initiative to develop interpretive maps, signs, visitor centers and educational programs that inform the public on how the massive floods shaped our landscape from Montana to Oregon. Also attending were Paul Hennon, Community Services Director for the City of Tualatin, and Linda Moholt, Chamber Director. Each of them will also be serving on various subgroups to build public and private support.

Locally in Tualatin, consultants have already started work with the City, THS and Chamber and other partners to plan our own Ice Age Discovery Trail, thanks to a County Visitors Association grant. THS is seeing an immediate impact with the installation of two brass plaques near our two large glacial erratics carried to Oregon on Ice Age Floods icebergs. The Society is helping underwrite these and another interpretive sign to be developed for the erratics as a match. The two plaques resemble the one placed outside the Center entrance in 2006.

If you are interested in visiting the Woodburn High School site where students are uncovering bones of ancient flora and fauna from a dry creek bed this summer, leave your name at the heritage center (503-885-1926) before September 20. We’ll car pool there on Saturday, September 22. Teacher David Ellingson spoke this spring and this is an opportunity to see how students have reconstructed the giant bison antiquus in his classroom and even do some sifting in the dirt at their actual dig site yourself. Access is available only in the driest part of the year. There’s talk of encouraging our own local schools to think about this possibility here.

Geologist Looks at Northern Path of Ice Age Floods
Bruce Bjornstad will provide an armchair guide to the “northern reaches” of the Ice Age Floods at 7:00 pm. Thursday, October 18 at Tualatin Heritage Center.

Bruce is a licensed geologist and hydrogeologist and senior research scientist at the Pacific Northwest National Laboratory in Richland, Washington. He has studied the Ice Age floods for over 30 years and is the author of several technical papers and two books on the subject. His first book "On the Trail of the Ice Age Floods: A Geological Field Guide to the Mid-Columbia Basin” was published in 2006. Bruce along with Gene Kiver, emeritus professor at Eastern Washington University, just released a second book in the On the Trail of the Ice Age Floods series titled "The Northern Reaches". The program is jointly sponsored by Tualatin Historical Society and the Lower Columbia Chapter, Ice Age Floods Institute. A $3 donation from adults is suggested.
