Join us for another wonderful program featuring speakers from Northwest Rose Historians on Wednesday, May 1 at 1:00pm. Laura King and Kathleen McMullen will share their research on the pioneer Robbins Rose at Tualatin Heritage Center and other early varieties that have made our area a nationally-known center for rose cultivation.

This monthly program is sponsored by the Tualatin Historical Society. For information, call 503.885.1926.

Who Was Dr. John McLoughlin?

Richard Matthews, docent at the 1845 McLoughlin House, now a part of the National Park Service, will share insights on this colorful figure in Oregon history from 1824-1846. He is vice-president of the McLoughlin Memorial Association which saved and moved the historic structure in 1908. He also volunteers at the 1849 Barclay House.

John McLoughlin (pictured below) originally came to the Northwest region in 1824 as a representative of the Hudson's Bay Company.

Dr. Gene Kiver, professor emeritus from Eastern Washington University, illustrates how Lake Missoula floods carved northern reaches of Washington state including Moses Coulee, Grand Coulee, Cheney-Palous Scablands and the Lake Pend Oreille area in Idaho. He spent decades mapping geology in eastern Washington with EWU Geography professor Dale Stradling. In the early 1990’s, Gene and others began talking about forming a group dedicated to sharing the Ice Age Flood story with the general public and the Ice Age Floods Institute was born. In 2009, legislation for an Ice Age Floods National Geologic Trail sponsored by U.S. Senator Maria Cantwell and U.S. Congressman Doc Hastings was passed by Congress. Presentation is free to the public but a $3 donation for adults is appreciated. For information, call 503.257.0144.

The Power of Good Ideas

Very soon now we should be receiving the green light from the City for the historic signs project started over a year ago. After many months, the committee sorted through design ideas, contacted property owners and secured permission from about a dozen historic properties willing to have a sign designating when that home or building was constructed and its original name. We hope these can be installed by the official August 18 date for Tualatin’s Centennial. Several of the properties were in sad disrepair and hardly worthy of a shiny new sign. One of those is the Minnie Skog house situated on property now owned by Legacy Meridian Park Hospital. Legacy has notified us that a $1500 donation will be coming to THS in May! These funds will be added to those previously donated and be kept in a pool of money to fund sign maintenance, replacement and possibly prepare a “tour map” to enable interested persons to learn more about each property. What a great testament this is to creative people working together for a common cause. ~ Art

Explore Oregon with Grant McOmie

On Thursday, June 20, 7:00 pm, Emmy Award–winning journalist and fifth-generation Oregon native Grant McOmie will share video clips and stories from his new guide to 101 of the best Oregon destinations featured in his popular television series Grant’s Getaways, produced by KGW-TV and Travel Oregon. While he has had a varied career reporting and producing topical and timely environmental news stories, features and documentary programs, it’s been the exploration of the Pacific Northwest back roads and byways that he has enjoyed the most. Sharing those journeys of discovery with readers and viewers has provided the greatest personal rewards and the dominant themes in his work. Grant recently covered Tualatin’s mastodon and Ice Age landmarks. His new book will be available for signing that evening.

News from THS Archive & Historic Preservation Committee
By Loyce Martinazzi

Recently a woman named Sharon Young came to the Heritage Center, carrying a delicate pink frosted glass bowl (pictured below) which she wished to donate to the Tualatin Historical Society. Sharon said her parents, Ed and Helen Weaver rented the house across from the tavern in Tualatin in 1953 and Sharon was born there. The bowl was found in the attic, and her mother gave it to Sharon.

The house across from The Spot tavern would have been Lizzie Smith Robinson Jones’ house. The Weavers may have been the first people to rent the house after Lizzie died.

Former Tualatin Council Member Remembers Years of Rapid City Growth and Services

By Bill Gleason

THS member Bill Gleason served as a Tualatin city councilor during 9 years of rapid growth and transformation of city’s downtown area. His roots in Portland and Tualatin area history are deep. We hope to include personal reflections each issue. If you have memories of earlier times in Tualatin, the editor will help you prepare the article for publication.

In the early 1900s, my dad often drove as many as 1500 head of sheep from Brownsville, up the valley through Tualatin and on to the flatlands east of Fort Vancouver. The fertile Willamette Valley was well known. Perhaps this was also dad’s incentive for bringing our family to this area in 1908. He was always up to a challenge, typical of early residents of the Tualatin River Valley. For a number of years he worked as a laborer for the Chinese overseer of Dr. Pilkington’s farms (Pilkington Road in Lake Oswego today). I had moved on to military service and college with a music focus.

After teaching public school in north Portland nearly 40 years, my wife Doris and I moved to Tualatin in 1982, then a community of just around 1,000. There was very little crime. It seemed everyone knew each other. You would leave home to visit or shop or do business and leave the house unlocked without fear of an unwanted guest. Travel throughout the city was easy and simple.

I applied to be a City Council member to fill a vacancy during the last year of Mayor Luanne Thielke’s service. With guidance of Mayor Stolze, our Council utilized urban renewal funds to create the Lake of the Commons, attracted companies like Oki Semiconductor, JAE and other industry developments, rebuilt the post office, library and senior center (now called Juanita Pohl Center), established working agreements with other entities like TVFR, county and state agencies, encouraged cooperative construction projects, built a tertiary water treatment plant, became a Tree City and expanded public safety services.

City Council was one of the most challenging experiences I have ever had. The people on staff were very dedicated to building the city we now share. For example, there was the amazing Development Director Janet Young. She quietly unraveled the difficulties so that the rest of us would be able to piece together the puzzle.

Steve Rhodes, a highly-qualified and professional City Manager led us into projects which formed the groundwork for today’s community. His leadership leaves a story of achievement and success that will be always remembered.

Jack Broome, retired Portland architect and community activist who as a fairly new Tualatin resident quickly became engaged in the development of our fast growing community while also working alongside his wife Althea Pratt to protect wetland areas.

Jan Giunta. Building the Commons would not have been possible without community minded persons such as Jan. Jan was the second citizen to buy a lot on the commons. The place became known as The Eatery, Bush Gardens and Togos. Her belief in community development helped make possible what we enjoy today.

There were many more persons who often worked behind the scenes. They are the ones who contribute articles to newspapers and are willing to accept a chore no one else wants to attempt. They deserve all the praise we can give them. You see them when you visit the Tualatin Heritage Center, the Tualatin Library or the Pohl Center, or while walking the parks or shopping, reading to schoolchildren or serving in places of worship. Some serve on relatively obscure committees, but their contributions result in community growth and development. You may recognize their names when an article appears in the newspaper about a significant local undertaking, supporting and encouraging our youth, and pointing why we must protect our water supply and environment. You know them when you visit the Tualatin Farmer’s Market and Crawfish Festival. And finally we must always acknowledge our civil servants like police, fire fighters, librarians, teachers and today’s city staff who plan and maintain our roads and parks and keep on providing the services that make our city what it is.
For our library feature this month I have been looking at the book, Men of Cham-poeg, book number 149. The courageous individuals who, for their own protection, needed to form this independent government are the subject of this book. “From far and near they came, the old and young, the hard-bitten mountain ranger, the missionary, the seaman, the blacksmith, merchant, doctor, farmer”, pioneers all, who had pushed to this last frontier and found themselves helpless and defenseless in this wilderness. Relying only upon themselves, they worked out a form of government and a code of laws, “well conceived and wisely administered”, known as the provisional government. The founding of the provisional government on May 2, 1843 has been called the most significant event in the development of the Pacific Northwest. In 1848 the United States took it over as a territory. It is the only section of our great republic that was acquired, not by purchase or conquest from a foreign power, but by colonization under the American flag. It looks like a good read and is certainly worthy information!

Survey of Adults 50-plus

The Tualatin Public Library wants to know what you think. Take the short survey and help the library understand how older adults view and use the library and what changes, if any, they would like to see. Visit https://www.surveymonkey.com/s/adults50plus or the library for a paper copy of the survey. In addition, they are also scheduling focus groups around the community. If you would like to participate in a focus group or if you have any questions contact Mala Vyas, Program Specialist-Older Adults, at mvyas@ci.tualatin.or.us or 503.691.3089.

Annual Pioneer Days May 28-31

Tualatin Heritage Center will be busy those four days as local 4th graders learn about life in pioneer times from devoted volunteers coordinated by Chris Tunstall and Evie Andrews. This is an educational day full of activities and demonstrations. One way you can show your support is providing lunch treats for the volunteers, several of whom are on loan from local businesses. Volunteers usually get a break at 11:30 each day while students are at the community park for lunch. For information about how you may contribute, please call 503.885.1926.
